

The Handle

Stumble back to the house you were born in your mother's voice calling the path out of crisscrossed lines in your palm re-centre the smooth black drive dive back into piles of leaves on the lawn all your yearnings swarm the entrance like insects your arm reaches out for the door whose handle is broken inside you